AUSTRALIAN DEVELOPER LAUNCHES DRAW TEAM GAME FOR IPAD AND APPLE TV

Independent Australian developer Christian Lee has today launched Draw Team, the new social drawing party game that can be played on iPad combined with Apple TV.

“My friends and I have always been huge board game fans, and I saw the opportunity to bring real social interaction to an iOS game with the current Apple platforms,” says Christian. “I wanted to remind people of the true meaning of ‘social’, and create as much laughter as possible in the process.”

Making use of the technology of the iPad to integrate with Apple TV via AirPlay, Draw Team plays like a traditional board game minus the hassle. It’s the perfect party game that harnesses the social possibilities of the iPad – and is just as fun to play without Apple TV for those who don’t own one.

As one player draws a secretly revealed mystery word on the iPad, their drawing appears simultaneously on the television screen and other players guess the word to compete for points. Players can relive the fun by sharing amusing or remarkable drawings via email and social media platforms with friends not in the room.

The game is free to download for a limited time, and has a simple interface so is easy for children, families and groups of adults alike to pick up and play. Up to nine individuals can play at a time, or for bigger parties numbers are unlimited in team play mode. In-app purchases of additional word packs tailored to skill level or special category such as ‘Difficult’, ‘Kids’, and ‘Movies’ enhance the experience.

Christian Lee is a 30-year-old Australian app developer who's worked on a variety of apps including The Times (News Limited, UK) for iPad, eBookers Explorer, and apps for bands such as Ladyhawke, Kylie Minogue, Silverchair and Empire of the Sun. Having spent years developing top-selling apps, this is his first major independent release.
